Some of the world’s most ancient writings are expressed in languages from the ancient Middle East and the lands of the Mediterranean Sea. Who wrote these and why? Who could read and write and what did these abilities grant them? What can we learn about history, people, and languages by examining the uses of writing? Through this course, students will imagine a social history of the languages of antiquity and explore new worlds through the power of writing.