Tired of Facebook slactivism? Learn how to advocate for your planet in this hands-on activism course.

Students will actively participate in the discussion of assigned readings and current environmental events and challenges. Students may choose their independent, end-of-semester project, approved by the professor, that builds on the themes of the course and advocates on behalf of an issue or perspective using the tools identified throughout the semester.

Projects may take many forms, including research papers, documentary film, photographic exhibits, original creative writing, zines, or blogs.

This course is open to all LSA students who are interested in the subject matter.
