Humans and Monuments: from the Ancient World to the Modern Day
(AnthrArch 296, Section 201)

Class fulfills Social Science Distribution (SS) and counts toward Anthropology major and minor

Instructor: Tim Everhart (timever@umich.edu)

Summer 2020
Tues/Thurs 10am-1pm
THE HUMAN LANDSCAPE
Innovation, Adaptation, and Evolution

Humans thrive in earth’s most remote and extreme environments.
Find out how, directly from the people that have done it.

How do humans manage to survive in climatological extremes? How have cultural and biological adaptations impacted our health, longevity, or even the world around us? In this class, we will combine bioinformatics, knowledge from written and oral histories, and bioarchaeology to reconstruct and better understand the complex relationship of humans to an ever-changing world.

This three-credit class satisfies Natural Science area distribution and counts towards Evolutionary Anthro/Anthropology Major as well as Bio Anthro minor requirements.
Don’t talk about this class at a family dinner, or on a first date...

Faith, Politics, Sex

Community and Conflict in American Christianity

How are FAITH, POLITICS, and SEX connected?
How do religious groups talk about sex and sexuality?
How do religious groups influence laws about sex?
What is “religious freedom?”
How do the LGBTQ+ community and religious institutions intersect?
What does it mean to be inclusive?
We will discuss all these issues and more in this course, using the tools of anthropology to guide us.

Summer 2020

ANTHRFCUL 298, Section 201

Tuesdays and Thursdays, 1:00-4:00pm

Instructor: Benjamin Hollenbach (bhollenb@umich.edu)

Fulfills Social Science Requirement, 3 Credits