Gerald Papasian is an award winning actor and stage director. He is interested in the dissemination of Armenian literary and dramatic works through translations, restorations and adapted productions for mainstream audiences. He has translated and published many articles and works from Armenian into English and French. Papasian founded the Dikran Tchouhadjian International Institute, and he continues to work on the restoration of Tchouhadjian's operas by gathering manuscripts long considered lost. Papasian has been awarded the Presidential Medal of Armenia in 2011, in recognition of his propagation of the Armenian heritage internationally for over 30 years.
