Armenian Liturgy and the Anthropology of Ritual and Sound

Dr. Christopher Sheklian

ANTHRCUL 458.006/NEAREAST 490.006

Winter 2018

MW 2:30PM - 4:00PM

This course pairs ethnographic material related to the role of Armenian Christianity in the lives of contemporary Armenians as a point of entry into three bodies of literature in anthropology and the social sciences. The first section pairs the literature on ritual with alternative attention to the category of ritual. In the second section of the course, recent anthropological work on sound, soundscapes and voice is read through the detailed hymn system of the Armenian Apostolic Church. Finally, the third section rereads the literature on community with an eye to Armenian reflections on church and community. Through these textual and embodied encounters with a little-known Christian religious tradition, students will become conversant with contemporary social scientific debates about affect and belonging, religion and ritual, and urban soundscapes.

Come explore the anthropology of ritual and sound through Armenian liturgy!
