2020 Teacher Training Workshop

Water and Environmental Justice: From Michigan to Latin America

Thursday, March 19
4:00-6:00 pm (optional)
Tisch Hall 1014, 435 S. State Street, Ann Arbor

Saturday, March 21
8:30 am-4:30 pm (main training)
Weiser Hall 1010, 500 Church Street, Ann Arbor and University of Michigan Museum of Art, 525 S. State Street, Ann Arbor

All registered participants will receive 6-8 State Continuing Education Clock Hours (SCECHs). 6 SCECH credits for Saturday workshop participants + an additional 2 SCECH credits for attendees at the Thursday keynote lecture.

This event will bring together scholars, educators, and artists to provide Michigan K-14 teachers with context and resources for teaching about issues of water and environmental justice. We will explore place-based pedagogies to help educators connect water issues across local and global scales.

The workshop will offer materials and resources to help educators foster classroom dialogue through hands-on and interactive activities, including the use of print and visual multimedia. The full-day workshop will include lectures, panel discussion, and interactive activities using water-themed prints at the University of Michigan Museum of Art, and a set of discussion questions and activities related to an exhibition of photographs comparing water crises in Flint and El Salvador.

Registration Fee: $20

Included in cost: Light breakfast, lunch (Central American tamales or pupusas plate from Pilar’s Tamales), book (Emily Wakild and Michelle K. Berry, A Primer for Teaching Environmental History, Duke University Press, 2018), and links to digital materials and resources specifically tailored to the event and the speakers.
