The University of Michigan Department of Psychology is ranked in the top three departments in the nation, and this prestigious ranking is due to the high quality of our students and faculty. With our long history of engaging the best and brightest in our field, we will continue to create the future research directions that characterize the discipline. The strong research environment in psychology provides a solid foundation for our educational mission at both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

The Department of Psychology encompasses a wide variety of academic and research activities that involve students in hands-on research opportunities to foster critical thinking and intellectual growth. Students gain strong competence in organizing, interpreting, and communicating effectively—skills that are universally applicable in today’s economy. Graduate students are well prepared for careers in both academic and applied settings, for positions in colleges and universities, governmental agencies, research organizations, clinics, schools, and corporate settings.

The department is committed to providing these opportunities by:

- Creating new, fundamental knowledge about the mind
- Teaching innovative courses and engaging undergraduates in our research and service activities
- Maintaining our record of outstanding graduate training to produce leading scholars
- Conducting technically and theoretically first-rate scholarship at the cutting-edge of science
- Fostering interdisciplinary research as a special part of the Michigan intellectual climate
To strengthen our position as one of the top departments in the nation, we must continue to build on our exceptional offerings. Our outstanding undergraduate and graduate programs, wide variety of courses, and premier faculty illustrate the extraordinary range of our department, and we need to support faculty research in order to continue to retain and recruit the very best. Also, we need support to recruit the brightest graduate students and to increase the variety of engaged learning experiences we offer to undergraduate students in order to further develop and enrich the Department’s remarkable programs.

PSYCHOLOGY STRATEGIC FUND

Expendable, undesignated gifts from $10,000 to $50,000 are extraordinarily important to the continuing success and growth of the department.

Contributions to the strategic fund make it possible to enhance the research and training of our undergraduate and graduate students, and to recruit, retain, and support our exceptional faculty. The strategic fund also provides resources for newly emerging and focused initiatives, including our effort to recognize the vital role of faculty mentorship in our students’ educational experiences. Overall, this fund is an excellent way to make an investment in the future of the psychology department.

ENDOWED GRADUATE FELLOWSHIPS

Graduate students are integral to maintaining the top standing of the Department of Psychology. They are the faculty of tomorrow and play a vital role in the completion of innovative research at U-M. They enhance the undergraduate experience by working closely with students in the classroom and in the laboratory. Named Graduate Student Fellowships of $1M endowed will foster dissertation work and prepare these students to do cutting-edge research and to become highly effective teachers. Endowed graduate fellowships provide us with an opportunity to enhance our contribution to the field and our reputation as one of the top psychology departments in the world by providing more students with greater access to a Michigan education. These graduate students will go on to become the future leaders in the field.

"The insight on a future as a psychology student, researcher, and in the workplace was extremely beneficial. Being a first-generation college student, I lacked the resources and knowledge about graduate school and how I need to prepare for it, but this program showed me realistic expectations."

UNDERGRADUATE STUDENT RESEARCH FUND

Well over 500 Psychology undergraduate students engage in research projects with faculty every year and many report that doing research was one of the most valuable experiences during their undergraduate years. Contributions to the Undergraduate Student Research Fund will help cover summer internships, research supplies, travel to research sites, attendance at scientific meetings, scientific poster and publication costs and other costs associated with cutting-edge research. Gifts have a real impact on the opportunities for scientific discovery that we can offer to our undergraduate students. With generous support from donors, more psychology students build their research skills and improve their readiness for competitive graduate programs, jobs in industry, and other professional career paths.
