Where Does Your Food Come From?
Find out at The Local Table—Registration Now Open

Workshops, field trips, events, classes, and lectures encourage us to rethink how and where we get our food

Are you locavoracious? If so, satisfy your craving for tomatoes from Tecumseh, honey from Howell, the perfect Michigan preserves, and more with The Local Table, a special program offered at Matthaei Botanical Gardens & Nichols Arboretum beginning this fall.

The Local Table has two components: the program of classes, workshops, and events, and the Local Table passport. (A full list of participating vendors and program descriptions is attached.)

The program: The Local Table program offers a variety of hands-on activities and informative classes and workshops, including a field trip to and wine-tasting at a local winery, a tour of Ann Arbor-area chicken coops, a class on canning and preserving food, how to stock the Michigan pantry, creating the menu for a 100-Mile Holiday Dinner, a screening of the documentary “Asparagus,” and much more.

The passport: For the Local Table passport, starting September 1 stop into Matthaei Botanical Gardens or at participating local food producers and growers to pick up your copy. Each time you visit and/or purchase from our participating local vendors and producers; attend one of our classes, workshops, or events; or attend events held by participating nonprofits, you'll get your passport stamped. Collect enough stamps and you’ll be a certified locavore. Plus, you’ll get a Local Table t-shirt for participating.

“Why local?” There are lots of good reasons. When you buy local you know who grew or raised your food, you help keep those local growers and producers in business, your dollars stay in the local economy, and you reduce your carbon footprint and help the environment by using less energy to get your food. And thinking locally helps us to better understand our region's rich food heritage and history.

We look forward to seeing you at The Local Table—we're saving a seat for you!
