INSTRUCTION EXPERIENCE

HBHE 621 (Winter/Spring 2015, 2016, 2016)- Advanced Research Methods -- Seminar in Behavioral Research Methods in Public Health

The purpose of this course is to provide practical advice on how to conduct studies that employ survey research methodology. I kept one basic question in mind as I developed the course: What aren't you told in graduate school that you really need to know once you're out in the field? As a result, the course is not designed to be self-contained. Instead, it should be viewed as a supplement to other research methods courses in the School of Public Health.

HBHE550 (Fall 2015) - HIV/AIDS: Perspectives on the state of affairs, science and response to a global pandemic.

About 35 million people are currently living with HIV, with 71% living in sub-Saharan Africa. For the first time, new treatments and strategies to prevent onward transmission have brought a vision of an "AIDS free generation". The influence of research, dissemination, policy and advocacy underlie US and International HIV/AIDS Strategies, which are uniformly adopting aggressive goals for eliminating new cases of HIV in the next decade. From the "cascade of HIV care" a new road map towards prevention and treatment has emerged and the role of individual health promotion, community engagement, health systems reforms, and policy are pivotal in achieving sustainable success in ending HIV. This course provides an overview of past, current and emerging issues in HIV-prevention, HIV testing, linkage and retention in HIV care, access to HIV treatment and achieving durable viral suppression in diverse domestic and global contexts from biological, social, structural, cultural and psychological perspectives.

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE [past 10 years]

08/14 – present School of Public Health, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI.

Research Associate Professor

Participation/contribution on multiple projects targeting health behavior and decision making in the areas of HIV-prevention and treatment, with specialization in medication and biomedical adherence, linkage/retention in HIV care, and the application of social behavioral models and interventions to the promotion of health in diverse populations.

11/09 – 7/14 Center for Health, Intervention and Prevention, University of Connecticut, Storrs, CT.

Research Scientist

Development and management of several areas of research, including antiretroviral adherence (theory development and testing, intervention development, synthesis and review of literature, and applications to adherence in the context of clinical trials), care initiation and maintenance for chronic conditions (including HIV-care model development and assessment, and intervention development), and methodological and statistical considerations and applications to health promotion research and its dissemination. This position also includes student mentoring and support in the development of new areas of inquiry that use theory based approaches to understand and support changes in health behavior and risk reduction. Additional research programs under development include the refinement and evaluation of Next-Step Counseling as a tool to support PrEP use and its application to ARV adherence, as well as the use of this and other brief intervention approaches in supporting timely entry into HIV-care and maintenance in care once initiated.

9/06 -- 11/09 Center for Health, Intervention and Prevention, Department of Psychology, University of Connecticut, Storrs, CT.

Assistant Research Professor

Coordination of several adherence (HIV medications) and resistance data sets and associated analyses, intervention development for existing projects targeting adherence to treatment for HIV care and prevention strategies for HIV, TB, diabetes complications, and childhood overweight, identification of new innovating strategies for intervention at point of service within healthcare systems, development of explanatory models of engagement in care, methodological evaluations of new and emerging projects, and initiation of new projects via multidisciplinary collaborations and well recognized funding agencies. Additionally, mentoring of graduate students at the Center in their dissertation, masters, and independent project work.
